Safety Points For Hunters

Richmond, Va. -- Inexperienced woodsmen aren't the only dangers facing hunters when deer season opens November 19.

Early morning driving and frightened animals can create problems too, according to John T. Hanna, director, Highway Safety Division of Virginia.

"Most hunters leave home early in the morning to get a head start," Hanna said. "This allows more hunting time, but sometimes puts motorists behind the wheel before they are fully awake and alert."

To combat early morning grogginess, Hanna suggests a good night's sleep. Hunters who leave before dawn should be aware that driving with headlights on is required by law from half hour after sunset to half hour before sunrise. Headlights not only increase the driver's visibility but make his car more visible to other motorists.

Frightened animals pose another problem for hunters. "Wild animals' actions are unpredictable. An animal disturbed by a hunting party is more likely to leave the protection of the woods. Alert drivers must watch for confused animals on the highways as well as other motorists."

"Thank You" From Local Boy Scouts

Boy Scouts of local Troop #546 have gotten off to a tremendous start in raising money to purchase a used bus!

The sale of Tom-Wat products, along with the profit made from the Coke stand and sale of baked goods and crafts at the Railroad Day Festival, made this possible.

The scouts would like to thank all the people who supported them in these projects and to express their gratitude to their parents, relatives and friends who donated their time and talents toward making these activities possible, and a very special "thank you" to their scoutmaster and his wife, Neil and Mack Goldstein, for all their help in planning and managing the fund raising projects.

Book Reviewed by Mrs. Webb

ON October 25, the English II class of Appomattox County High School, and their teacher, Miss Claudine O'Brien, had as their guest speaker Mrs. Ruth Webb, a former English teacher in the high school.

Mrs. Webb gave a talk on one of her favorite subjects, the author, Jesse Stuart, who lives in Greenup, Kentucky. Because of a family connection, Mrs. Webb met and visited in the home of Mr. Stuart when she visited relatives in Portsmouth, Ohio and Greenup several years ago.

In speaking to the English class, Mrs. Webb presented a personal glimpse of the man, Jesse Stuart as she had remembered him from the rooms, two rest rooms, full basement and central heat. The pastor, Rev. J. C. Miller conducted the service and the Rev. R. E. McDowell, pastor of Bethel, preached the dedicatory sermon. The Rev. W. E. Hughes of Keysville, a former pastor, led in the prayer of dedication. The Rocks Quartet rendered special music. The program also included the presentation of the American Flag and the Christian Flag.

Little Susan Winn Williams daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard T. Williams, Jr., was christened at the regular church services at Pamplin United Methodist Church last Sunday.

Mrs. Ruth Webb, center above, reviewed the book 'God's Oddling" by Jesse Stuart for the 11th Grade English class of Mrs. Claudine O'Brien on Monday of this week. Shown with Mrs. Webb are: Michael Elliott, left, and Gary Carter, on the right. Gary and Mike wrote the following article on the review which they will send along with a personal letter to Mr. Stuart who resides in Greenup, Kentucky. Mrs. Webb has had the privilege of meeting Mr. Stuart personally and talking with him.

visit. She also told about the life of the Stuart family as presented by the author in one of his books, "God's Oddling." In writing many of his stories, books, poems and articles, the author has shown his love for the beautiful hills, the people, and the land of Kentucky.

Mrs. Webb chose "God's Oddling" to review to the English class, because as she stated - "this one book not only depicts the life of Mick Stuart, Jesse's father, but also tells much about the life of the author himself. Although Mick Stuart was an uneducated man by our standards, according to Jesse Stuart, he was an earth poet, a man who was educated by the soil and land on which he lived, worked, and dearly loved."

When Mick Stuart's life was ended, the author was left not an estatge of wealth, but a wealth of love for the land, for nature, birds, animals, trees and plants, which could never be surpassed by any material wealth.

Mrs. Webb paused in her review at this point and said, "Jesse Stuart's father, Mick, was truly a rich man - rich in his love for his wife and his children, rich in his great love for his land."

Jesse Stuart, in his book, "God's Oddling" tells how he applied this title to his father, and how, in return, Mick Stuart called his son, Jesse, "God's Oddling." To read this book and find out just how this title came about, affords the reader a great experience in the field of American folk-literature.

Jesse Stuart, a leader in the field of education and in the field of literature, is one of today's best-known and best-
